Summary: (machine translated) Hiking canyon below a reservoir with not so easy access
Hydrology:
Access: (machine translated) From the old Bellinzona-Locarno connection road, on the orographic left side of the Verzasca, go up towards the Verzasca Valley. Park the upper vehicle near the dam wall (slightly below the paid parking spaces with the parking time limited to 3 hours). \Park the lower vehicle in Tenero as close as possible to the canyon exit. You can get there by taking the old road (Bellinzona-Locarno) across the Verzasca in a westerly direction into Tenero, turning left at the first road and then immediately left again.
Approach: (machine translated) We go over the dam crest (475 m a.s.l.), past the bungee device, to the western slope of the Verzasca. There we take the path in southern direction, first downhill, then slightly uphill again. After 100 m on this path we turn left downhill on a path. At about 425 m above sea level this path branches off. We go here to the right always further downhill. At a pylon/polder the path ends. We now keep northwards into the chute (rappel if necessary), follow it downwards, cross an almost flat step to the left (northeast), cross the slope - a bit tricky - again about 30 m downwards and then stand at a squat but striking tree directly at the vertically sloping canyon rim. From the tree to the canyon it is not quite 50 meters (taking 2 x 60 m of rope seems useful in case you reach the canyon rim at another point).
Tour: (machine translated) The somewhat different canyon, of which nothing was known from above until now. You can also walk up from the canyon exit, but then the walk is hardly worth it. When roping in and down in the canyon, the screams of the bungee jumpers - the overhanging dam wall is about 200 m high - echo through the canyon every 5 minutes.
Return: (machine translated) At the canyon exit after the road bridge, swim right across and out on the dirt road.
