Résumé: (traduction alternative) One of the longest and most recent tours in Friuli (2023). A canyon of major dimensions in a rarely visited part of the Val Settimana. Geologically significant, especially when done in full, with the Pale Candele and optional ascent of Monte Turlon. An intricate flow system gives life to Nuccí further down. Possibility to make the descent shorter: Nuccí-express and ultra express (described).
Hydrologie: A trickle of water is possible at the start, after it filters away but comes back soon, with multiple tributaries and karstic layers bringing life (and depth) to Nuccí. Snowremains are possible in the upper Nuccí.
Accès: (traduction alternative) Claut - Val Settimana - park by Stalle Nuccí (second stable on the other side of main river)

Approche: (traduction alternative)

Long, tiring, exposed. Such is the hike along the decommissioned trail 385 (no longer maintained by Italian Alpine Club) luckily it is still marked red/white most of the time and becoming better as more canyoneers go.

Cross the main river, walk past the Stalle Nuccí (stable), cross Río Nuccí immediately after, to find a first cairn indicating you are on the path. Walk gently up, towards the gorge at first and take the steep trail diagonally up the woods and away from the canyon, sometimes disappearing in the high grass, sometimes involving minor scrambling¹. At alt. 1200 there is an exposed traverse going left towards a small tributary canyon, hike up this little canyon for a few meters and traverse/climb back in the woods.

Now, there are 3 options:

1. continue towards alt. 2000m for the full Río Nuccí (offline gps will be useful, the trail is faint at least)
2. enter tributary Ciol Bevador alt. 1480m. (leave trail around alt. 1540m.) for the classic 'Nuccí-express'
3. enter tributary Ciol Bevador alt. 1260m. (leave trail around alt. 1210m.) for a short version of 'Nuccí-express'

Done Nucci-express. Impressive to see it finally with high flow. Added chain for intermediate belay in the big waterfall. Team members enjoyed the approach and ambiance in the gorge.

Rio Nuccí (ultra express) was back at early summer flow after yesterday's rain. To our content also some sun in the canyon. All anchors ok. Added some quicklinks. One idea for next time to make the 63m shorter. Some markings on the approach disappearing. Recorded a track for the approach. (traduction alternative)
