Résumé: (traduction alternative) The Saiherbach is a short but scenic canyon. It is characterized by very many abseils and few horizontal parts. The south-facing location makes it a special kind of bathing experience with a fantastic view of the Dachstein. When the water level is low, it is rather uninteresting to walk through.
Hydrologie:
Accès: (traduction alternative) By car on the Westautobahn exit at Regau, drive to Bad Ischl, there do not exit to the center, but continue through a tunnel in the direction of Salzburg. Take the first exit after the tunnel and after a few hundred meters you will reach a bridge over the river Ischl. Cross the bridge and after about one kilometer you will reach the Hobeltenne Inn. In order not to disturb the neighbors, park right here. Now simply follow the signs to the waterfall.
Approche: (traduction alternative) You now follow all further signs until you reach the waterfall. Here you can judge the current water flow. About a hundred meters before the fall, a small path branches off on the orographic right side, which then winds steeply up through the forest. If the path becomes more level, you will return to the stream. Here is the entry of the canyon.
Tour: (traduction alternative) At the first piton hangs immediately a fixed rope that can be used. The next step can be overcome with some skill even without a rope. You get to a waterfall through which you inevitably have to rappel. Except for the cold shower, however, it should not cause any difficulties. In case of extreme water flow, or with beginners, it may be possible to build a Rapell Guidé (bolts at the second pool). Otherwise, the three pools (C6, C3, C4) can be rappelled in one. A somewhat blocked abseil follows for 7 meters. At the latest now you get into the sun and look directly at the Dachstein (escape possibility on the right). There are two possibilities to rappel the next step. Directly over the overhang which is a bit more spectacular, or further left which is recommended for beginners. With a 55m rope (or longer) it is possible to rappel beyond the two pools to the last rappel. This is somewhat hidden behind a boulder on the left side. A fixed rope at the beginning of the boulder facilitates the access. The last rappel point is the crowning glory of the canyon. 35m are to be rappelled partly directly in the waterfall, partly even in front of the public, since the hiking trail passes below.
Retour: (traduction alternative) From the waterfall you return to the parking lot on the already known path.

Automatisch importiert von Descente-Canyon.com für Canyon Saiherbach Nice, short canyon. Beautiful views, pleasant reppel (last cascade). Sometimes fix ropes. Access: Don't go to the waterfall. Walk through the village along Jaizenstrasse (you can also walk across the field, but it's easier and faster along the road). When the path forks, go left towards the canyon (there is a barrier). Once the path approaches the stream, you can go down. Entry is not marked. If you go higher, the descent is easier, but crossing the canyon can be more difficult in places (there are no stands). All stands OK, many (very thick) fixed ropes. Unfortunately, practically dry which reduced the fun but very much (traduction alternative)
