Résumé: (traduction alternative) Comfortable open and continuous lime canyon; mostly little water; interesting after rains; rappel mostly in the water flow; shallow pools; belay very good at the top (10mm Inox) sufficient at the bottom (slings) possibly take spare slings; neighboring canyon of Rio Simon; half-day tour. Interesting for days on which the access to other canyons is excluded!
Hydrologie:
Accès: (traduction alternative) From Carnia take the SS13 in the direction of Tarvisio. About 3km after the village of Resiutta there is a small tunnel and a bridge over the Fella river. After the bridge turn left and continue towards Roveredo. At the beginning of Roveredo, on the right side of the road, there is a small driveway leading to a large concrete parking lot. Here you park the car.
Approche: (traduction alternative) From the parking lot, follow the road further through the village until you reach the bus stop/water house with trail markings. After the bus stop there is a small wall with the blue/white canyoning marking. Here follow the steep path next to the fence up into the forest. After a few minutes you will meet trail 424 (this is also the trail that leads to Rio Simon). Be careful to follow the path 424 on the right only for about 100m (50m further you are already at the exit of the Rio Brezzi where you can also check the water level before the tour). For the further access you follow 50m before the creek on the left a steep path (or. on the right side of the creek /some orange color markings on the trees) which is inconspicuous at the beginning. After several meters of ascent (approx. 45min.), look out for a cord tied around the tree at approx. 730m on the right. If the cord is no longer there, leave the path on the right at the point where the path moves away sharply to the left. Descend here briefly (2min) and without a trail into the stream.
Tour: (traduction alternative) A few meters after the entry comes the highest rappel point of 40m (right). Two rappels of about 20m follow without any path before you climb down a step in front of a large clamping block. After the clamping block, eight more rappels up to a maximum of 22m follow in the open wooded canyon terrain. The rappelling is mostly done via tree loops or compensation anchorages in the water. Should the water level be unexpectedly high, you can always get off on the right side to the access path. At the end of the tour at approx. 510m you are back at the access path 424. Here you usually get off because two more steps after the hiking trail are not worthwhile (see alternative way back).

Retour: (traduction alternative)

Either follow path 424 to the right until you reach the fork and then take the path on the left that you took during the access down to the village to the parking lot, or continue descending in the streambed and after two more rappels before getting off at the road bridge in the village.

Because it was so beautiful (and many other streams had too much water) we walked it again. (traduction alternative)

Stream due to heavy rainfall (80L/day). There is a white sling hanging from a tree where the access branches off into the creek. I didn't remember the creek being so nice, but with a lot of water it is pretty good. No water problems during rappel. Most of the anchors are OK, some of the slings were not ideal and have been replaced. The lower part is also nice, if you disregard the 5min block hopping after the hiking trail. Directly before the bridge turn right up to avoid the blackberries. Pictures once 40er directly after the entry from below and once last waterfall before the trail crossing (possible water level check). (traduction alternative)

This canyon is rather underrated. 16 rappels (down to the village, not quitting by the 424), quite continuous, spectacular at places, especially at the beginning. Requires lots of rain to get to form, that is true. We did it after 3 days (cca 200mm) rain, and it was fun. My only grief was the approach path that disappeared very soon (by the pylon), but the clear forest made it possible to get through. It is rather dull climb anyway, steep without rest and indeed took 1:15 to get to the top. @Georg: That thing on the picture is not an anchor but a deviation. Anchor there is a couple of metres backwards.

Steep access throughout. Descent time adjusted as I find 2h to the bottom very sporty. 2:30 to the 1st exit and 3h to the road should be doable. I can agree with Horst that some of the slings could be renewed. For the most part, however, everything is still in order except for the first rappel after the possible exit (see photo). If possible, place a second anchor here and equip it with a maillon link. (traduction alternative)

Stands are too far OK. if the next one goes into the canyon it would be quite good to take a rope with you to swap a few canyons (traduction alternative)

For the approach you can roughly follow OSM, whereby the climbing tracks have currently been optimized and lead directly to the junction of the 424. Due to the heavy rainfall in October, we found a super clean gorge; there was also plenty of water. For me, there is absolutely no reason to get off trail 424 and hike down. This is followed by 4 well-equipped, nice abseils. The stands have survived the flood well. Our times are comfortable for 2 people. Approach 50min ; Canyon all the way down 1h50min (traduction alternative)

Walk-in after rainfall. All stands top. (traduction alternative)

All upper stands would be rehabilitated (inox chain stand and wingrings). Bottom continues to have balance anchors, tree slings. New rep cord on tree where you leave trail to creek/entrance. (traduction alternative)
